

On-line Research, Information & Resources

July 2007

The Internet has tremendous global reach and has amazing potential for still further development and expansion, making it the most comprehensive resource and information base to date.

Our E-Business Advisers discuss just what's available:

The growing availability of on-line research, information, demographics and statistics provides businesses with a truly comprehensive amount of on-line resource - at the click of a button!

The Internet provides an Aladdin's Cave of information, data, facts, charts, statistics and figures to help formulate business ideas, make important decisions and check out new and emerging markets.

Many small businesses have also caught on to the fact that they can find out interesting facts about their competitors - you'll be amazed what secrets some give away if you look!

1. Find it on the Web

On-line research provides businesses with an invaluable, comprehensive gateway to market data, statistics and company information.

It provides direct links to market data, industry reports, company lists, statistics, industry news, legislation, links to associations, professional bodies, trade journals, research companies, consultants, industry sites and portals.

Many research web sites provide free access to data and statistics, although often for full unrestricted use they sometimes require users to complete a quick registration process to access direct links to this information.

Research on-line can be searched by sector, organisation name or type, keyword, geographical area or a combination of a number of desired characteristics.

The Web also provides access to a wide range of valuable sites, specifically developed to provide up-to-the minute business information – a fantastic resource for the small business starting up, through to the largest companies needing to keep up with the latest industry news.

Likewise, there is a huge range of free “stuff” that you can utilise - from imagery to free software.

We've provided some of our favourites below - but a search in your favourite Search Engine will provide many more.....
